Introduction

Within this expansion to the Arcanum game system you will find a new set of optional rules for the placing of map tiles. You can of course, still use the old system if you like.

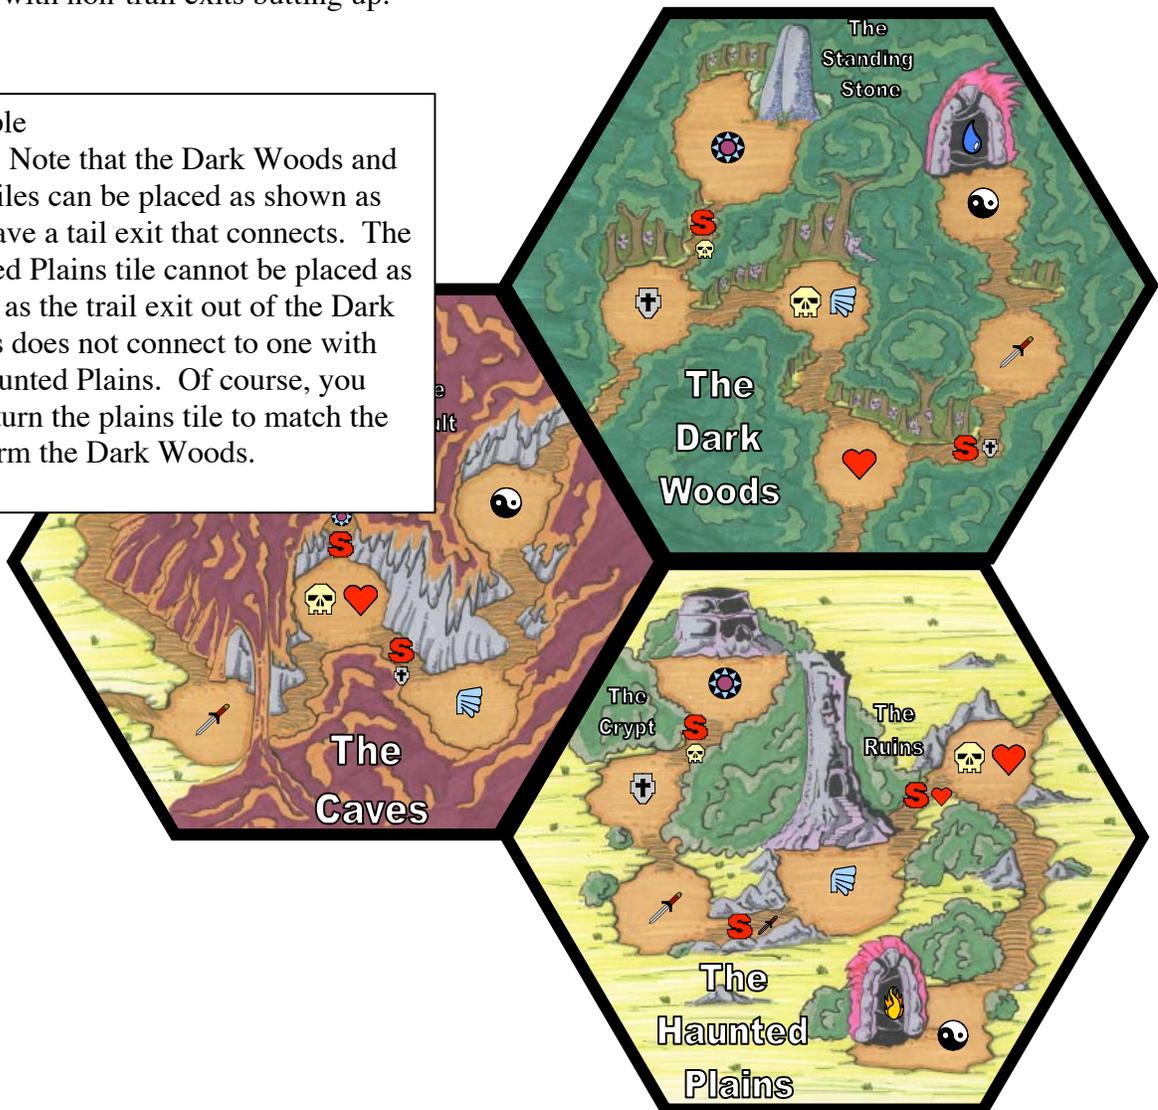

Creating the Map Board

Before the game begins, but after players have chosen their characters, turn over and shuffle the various map tiles to be used. If you are including optional tiles from other expansions, these must be agreed upon by all the players before the game begins. After the tiles have been shuffled, deal out to each player the tiles until all tiles have been handed out. Starting with the player who has the Tower tile, have them lay down this tile. The player to the right may then lay down a single tile, and so on until all players have placed a tile. Continue this process until all tiles have been placed.

The only restriction to placing tiles is that all tiles must connect in some way. There can be no islands of separate tiles, nor can there be tiles that are cut off from other tiles. All tiles that butt up to each other, must connect by way of a trail exit from that tile, or with non-trail exits butting up.

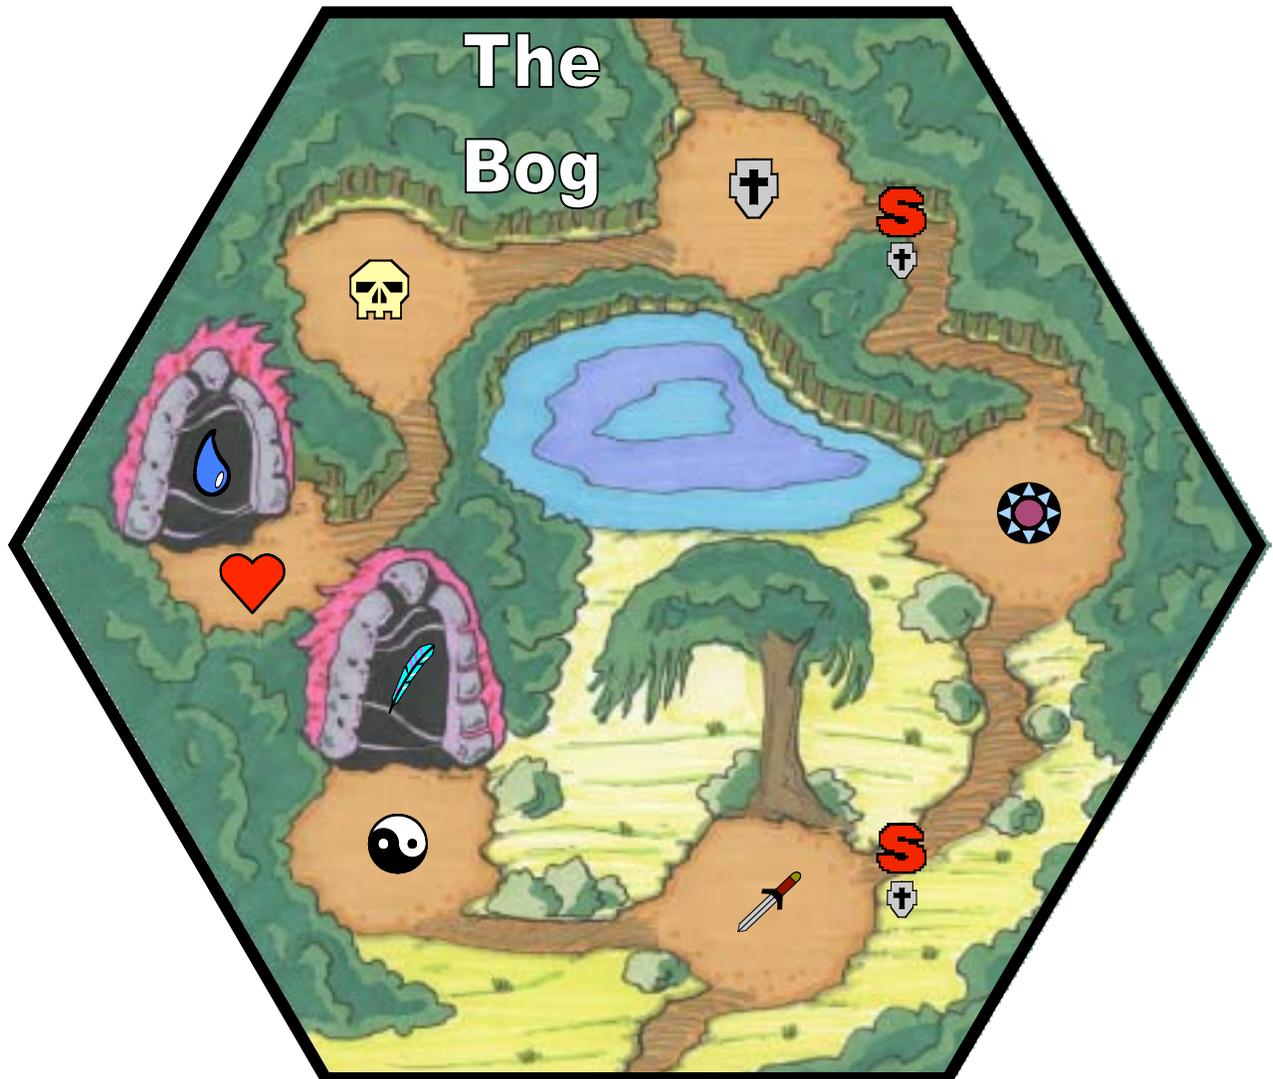

Example

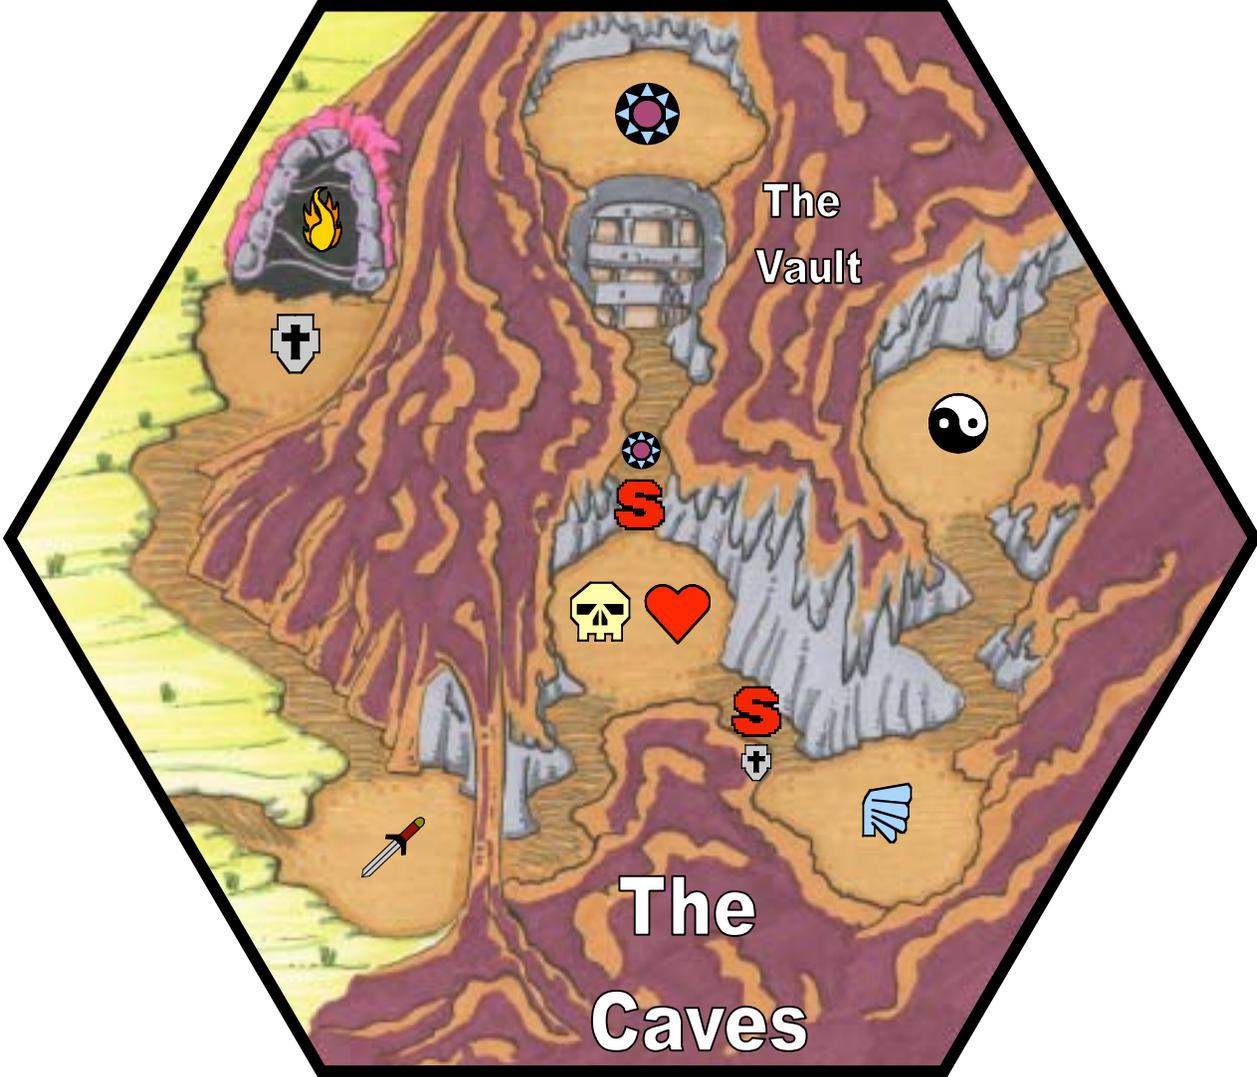

Note that the Dark Woods and Cave tiles can be placed as shown as they have a trail exit that connects. The Haunted Plains tile cannot be placed as shown as the trail exit out of the Dark Woods does not connect to one with the Haunted Plains. Of course, you could turn the plains tile to match the exit form the Dark Woods.

If, when it is your turn to place a tile, you find you cannot, then you must skip your turn.

That's it, have fun....
